1. On 26 June 1953 the Central Committee of the Partido Socialista Popular (PSP, Cuban Communist Party) held a meeting at the home of Nila ORTEGA, at which time the present political situation in Cuba was discussed. The possibilities of a revolution in Cuba, as opposed to a program of agitation throughout the Republic, were discussed and examined carefully to determine which alternative would best benefit the Party.
2. The general conclusion was that the Party should try to establish better relations with the government of BATISTA and gain additional positions within the government. By doing this, in the event that a political revolution should develop in Cuba, the PSP members in the government would be able to throw the country into a state of social revolution as well.
3. A committee composed of Carlos Rafael RODRIGUEZ, Anibal ESCALANTE, and Salvador GARCIA Aguero has been charged with the responsibility of drawing up plans to bring about a better political understanding between the PSP and the BATISTA government.
